

INTRODUCTION

SA8000, the global humane workplace standard developed by Social Accountability International, provides retail and brand companies with a tool – the SA8000 Signatory program - to demonstrate a real and credible commitment to achieving decent working conditions in their supply chains.

To become a Signatory, a company must define the scope of its operations that it intends to bring into compliance with SA8000, develop a plan and management system for achieving this goal, and publicly issue an annual progress report subject to verification by SAI before publication.

Signatory benefits include the right to use the SA8000 Signatory logo and description to communicate with stakeholders (e.g., in advertising, public relations, promotions, on-shelf signage, hang-tags etc.), technical assistance in implementing SA8000 from SAI staff and other Signatories, and access to relevant research and templates for communications, Planning and Systems.

SA-8000 Program

Consumers and other stakeholders have become increasingly concerned about whether products have been manufactured under conditions of violation of human rights, child labor and discrimination – as often reported by the media.

The existing management of many companies cannot adequately cope with the myriad demands imposed by labour laws, codes of conduct of individual companies, as well as their stakeholders.

A greater challenge is to effectively monitor whether the manufacturers and suppliers have implemented

Why become SA 8000 certified?

- Enable companies to develop and implement effective labour practices.
- Enhance long term relationships between the company and its stakeholders.
- Achieve international standard and enhance credibility.
- Generate positive sentiment for the company and its products.
- Reduce the number of second party audits of suppliers.
